IFRS University
Consortium on

As accounting practitioners begin to assess the implications that this single set of globally accepted standards will have on US companies, faculty are also considering what this will mean for the current approach to accounting and auditing education.

To assist accounting educators, Deloitte created its International Financial Reporting Standards (IFRS) University Consortium. The Deloitte IFRS University Consortium is made possible by Deloitte & Touche LLP and the Deloitte Foundation, a not-for-profit organization that supports accounting and business education within the United States.

What's on the Site?

On the consortium site, you will find a library of resources and complete, classroom-ready IFRS course materials, including slide decks from Deloitte subject matter leaders, and a series of case studies recently used as part of a graduate level accounting course.

Benefits to Registering

Registration and the use of materials on the site are free.

Schools that register receive the following benefits:

- input in the direction, goals and resources available from the consortium
- participation in webcasts and training sessions
- sharing of classroom best practices
- involvement in the development of consortium materials
- access to support and guidance from Deloitte professionals

Don't Delay!

To register, go to Deloitte's IFRS University Consortium web site at <http://www.deloitte.com/us/ifrs/consortium>.
